

Amy's Blog

February 10th 2007

The Learning Tower

We found the coolest toddler product ever invented! It's called The Learning Tower. Anna so badly wants to be involved with what's going on in the kitchen, or at least see what's going on up on the counter. She started climbing the tall chairs at the counter, and we were beginning to worry that she might fall and hurt herself. At a play date at a friend's house, we discovered The Learning Tower. It's awesome! Anna can climb in and out of it herself. There's a sturdy platform for her to stand on, and it fits right up next to the counter. Two toddlers can easily fit in it together, and it will be something that can be used up to about age 5 at least. Now she can play with water in the sink, help make cookies, or just watch while I make dinner. She's so much happier, and I get so much more done in the kitchen - in peace even!!! It was fairly pricey, but totally worth every penny.

